2 Dec. 1855

My dear Sir

On referring to my memoranda, I do not find that I have any note, either in print or M.S., of the emendation your quick sight detected in the corrected folio, 1632, viz (Mach. A I sc VII)

"Who dares do more is none" instead of

Who dares, no more is none, as it stands printed in that folios. Mr Foster has my detailed notes, made with all care & diligence, of every minute change that I could discover in the hand-writing of the old Conceptor; & there it may possibly be found, but I am pretty sure it is not.

This discovery, which escaped me, makes me much wish that you would follow me in my examination, as far as is compatible with your other engagements. —

At all events, I should like you to inspect the volume again; and I told the House-keeper at Devonshire House to keep the book at hand, as I might want the use of it again soon.

Therefore, if you can spare time to take only another look at it, you will really do me a service.
If you can, I will meet you on any day, and at any hour, in Piccadilly again for the purpose.

I see that Southern, ^{the poet,} in his copy of the folio of 1685 altered "no" to do; so that, in all probability, he anticipated Rowe in that emendation.

I am,

My dear Sir,

Yours very faithfully
